

U.S. Supreme Court Holds FHFA Director Removable at Will

Collins et al. v. Yellen, Secretary of the Treasury et al. (Case No. 19-422, U.S. slip op., June 23, 2021)

On June 23, 2021, the Supreme Court held that the single-director structure of the Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA) was unconstitutional, dismissed the claim that the 2012 “net worth sweep” agreement between the agency and Treasury should be invalidated, and remanded the decision on relief back to the lower court. The case was brought by shareholders of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac (GSEs).

As a result of the decision, the Administration has the opportunity to change the leadership structure at the agency and replace the current FHFA director. It is not yet clear who may be the potential permanent replacement, but the White House will likely appoint one of the current FHFA Deputy Directors as Acting Director, until a permanent Director can be confirmed.

In the consolidated cases of Collins v. Yellen, the issues before the Court included:

- (1) whether the FHFA's structure violates the separation of powers agreement under the Constitution; and,
- (2) whether the agency exceeded its statutory authority under the Housing and Economic Recovery Act (HERA) with a final agency action (the “third amendment” to the preferred stock purchase agreements (PSPAs) or “net worth sweep”).

On the first question, in a split decision, the Court held that the FHFA structure violated the separation of powers and severed the provision in the law that restricted the head of the agency to be removable by the President only “for cause” (i.e. misconduct or neglect), but did not strike down the entire agency itself. The Court followed the reasoning in a similar case heard last year, where it held that the director of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) was removable at will by the president. This struck down a provision in the Dodd-Frank Act that restricted removal of the director only “for cause” (“inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance”). (Seila Law v. CFPB.)

On the second question, the Court unanimously dismissed the claim that the 2012 PSPA amendment should be invalidated, clarifying that the action was within the agency's powers as conservator of the GSEs. According to the Court, HERA grants the FHFA expansive authority to act, where it could have “reasonably concluded that [the 2012 agreement] was in the best interests of members of the public who rely on a stable secondary mortgage market.” Given recent action by the FHFA and Treasury (see more below on the fourth amendment to the PSPAs), the plaintiffs may be entitled to retrospective relief, which the Court remanded to the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit for resolution.

BACKGROUND AND HOLDING:

In response to the housing market crash of 2008, Congress passed the Housing and Economic Recovery Act (HERA), which established the FHFA as the conservator of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. At that time, the Treasury Department made an agreement with FHFA to provide up to $100 billion in funding for the GSEs in exchange for preferred stock and dividends tied to the amount of money invested in the company. The issue brought by the plaintiffs in this case deals with a change made to that agreement in 2012, stating that Fannie and Freddie would instead pay dividends tied to their net worth rather than be fixed – essentially sweeping all of the GSEs profits to the Treasury and annulling the contractual rights of the GSEs' shareholders. The plaintiffs argued that the FHFA and Treasury did not have the authority to enter into this agreement and that the provision in HERA that limits the president's ability to remove the FHFA Director only “for cause” renders the agency unconstitutional.

The Supreme Court held that the 2012 agreement was valid given the Agency's conservatorship authority but ruled that the removable provision in HERA was unconstitutional and must be severed. Prior to this ruling, FHFA Director Calabria's term was set to expire in 2024, where the President was only able to remove him "for cause." With this ruling, the President is now able to remove the Director "at will," similar to other cabinet positions. It is not yet clear when a permanent director will be confirmed or who that replacement may be, but reports indicate Sandra Thompson, current Deputy Director for the Division of Housing Mission and Goals, may be named soon as Acting Director of the agency.

The plaintiffs made several arguments rejected by the Court, including offering distinctions between the nature and breadth of the CFPB and FHFA (who the agencies regulate and how for example), which the Court rejected as "not dispositive." Here, the Court held that "nothing about the size or role of the FHFA convinces us that its Director should be treated differently from the Director of the CFPB." As in Seila Law, the Court again held that "the Constitution prohibits even 'modest restrictions' on the President's power to remove the head of an agency with a single top officer." The Court also rejected the plaintiffs' argument that as conservator, the FHFA does not wield executive power and thus limited removal restrictions are warranted. The Court determined that the agency does not always act as conservator and that HERA authorizes agency actions that are clearly executive power (including the ability to appoint itself as conservator). The plaintiffs' claim that the agency is not regulating purely private actors was also rejected where it was argued that the GSEs instead have federal charters, public objectives, and receive special tax exemptions and borrowing rights. On this claim, the Court held that there is "no question that the FHFA's control over Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac can deeply impact the lives of millions of Americans by affecting their ability to buy and keep their homes."

Notably, after oral argument was held in this case, the FHFA and Treasury again agreed to amend the PSPAs (the fourth amendment), which eliminated the "net worth sweep" (the variable dividend formula) that caused the shareholders' injury. As a result, the Court held that the shareholders have grounds for the retrospective relief requested, but not prospective relief, which should be resolved in the lower courts.

NAR ADVOCACY:

NAR has been closely following this case because of the impact of the FHFA's actions on the GSEs, including the recent changes to the PSPAs and capital rule concerns that impact the primary and secondary markets' overall liquidity and GSE's movement out of conservatorship. The fourth amendment made to the PSPAs in January included new volume caps on the GSE's share of second home mortgages and investor loans, which is already reportedly disrupting transactions. The recent capital rule could also have market destabilizing effects, raising costs on consumers, shifting more market share to government programs, and jeopardizing taxpayer protections such as through reductions in credit-risk transfers.

With new potential leadership running FHFA, there could be a shift in policy, including more changes to the PSPAs and other rules and regulations that could keep the agency running as conservator of the GSEs.

NAR supports transitioning Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to systemically important financial market utilities (SIFMUs) as the most effective and least disruptive way to lock in their critical role in the market. NAR proposed its utility model for Fannie and Freddie reform in the winter of 2019, arguing this designation would balance the need to protect taxpayers while allowing for GSEs to take advantage of innovation in the private market. NAR expanded on that proposal during an event held this January, offering specifics on how the GSEs can attract investors, minimize risk, and keep costs down as they transition into SIFMUs. Many industry experts have noted that the GSEs' somewhat conflicting role as "shareholder-held" and "congressionally-chartered" entities make them perfectly suited for the "utility" designation. As market utilities, the GSEs would support the charter duties including supporting a national market and underserved communities, while utilizing private capital to protect taxpayers and private ownership to optimize innovation, in a sustainable, mission-driven structure.

NAR will continue to work with the FHFA to ensure that any changes to the PSPAs, capital rule, or otherwise, are done to further a smooth and realistic transition out of conservatorship that protects consumers, taxpayers, and the real estate industry that is driving the economic recovery.
