RE: OCC Docket ID OCC-2018-0038; Federal Reserve Docket No. R-1639, RIN 7100-AF30; FDIC RIN 3064-AE87 Request for Public Hearing

The undersigned organizations are writing to request a public hearing, no fewer than 30 days after February 5, 2019, the final date for written comments in the above captioned rulemaking process. We believe that the history surrounding the question of the residential appraisal threshold compels a public hearing to be held for the benefit of both regulators and impacted stakeholders.

As the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (collective, the Federal banking agencies) can appreciate, we are not yet two years removed from the last time this question was discussed. As part of the Economic Growth and Regulatory Paperwork Reduction Act review completed in March of 2017, the agencies solicited both written comments and public testimony regarding whether to increase the residential appraisal threshold from $250,000 to $400,000. In that process, the agencies received 150 written comments on this specific issue, with opposition outpacing support by a 5-to-1 margin. The agencies also held six rounds of public hearings, where both panel discussions and statements from public attendees were heard.

We emphasize the recent deliberative EGRPRA process, and its relative closeness to this new proposal, to underscore the amount of resources that were used to reach the following conclusion in 2017:

Based on considerations of safety and soundness and consumer protection, the agencies do not currently believe that a change to the current $250,000 threshold for residential mortgage loans would be appropriate.¹

Given the short timeframes between the prior conclusion and the current proposal, we are confused as to what indicators have changed to support such a stark and sudden reversal of what had been a settled position by the agencies.

For example, Congress has already provided a legislative solution² to the acute concern with appraiser supply in rural markets as identified in the Joint Report to Congress and that the agencies now propose to implement as part of this proposal. We also believe that many of the market forces that contributed to demand in the refinance market have significantly cooled, further ameliorating outsized demand for residential mortgage lending appraisal services.

Using the EGRPRA process as precedent for this specific issue, we believe that a public hearing, subsequent to the filing of written comments on the proposed rule, is not only appropriate but necessary to provide the agencies with a fully developed public record upon which to inform its decision, especially in light of the proximity to the last time the agencies last considered the same issue. By placing the hearing after the written comment period, the agencies will also hear from better informed stakeholders who can provide additional insight built on the written record.

As a final matter, we wish to make clear that the undersigned organizations reserve the right to file substantive comments in this docket, regardless of whether the agencies agree to hold a hearing or decline to do so.
