

Moving Forward.

As our California lawmakers in Washington consider legislation to reform housing finance, they should acknowledge the vital role the housing market plays in America's economy, and address the following principles:

- 1 The role of government in housing finance will change, but it cannot go away completely. Without some government involvement, big banks will be left with greater power and more "too big to fail" institutions may be created and ultimately bailed out by taxpayers.
- 2 Continue the 30-year fixed-rate home mortgage— as the New York Times reported, reform that would allow the 30-year fixed-rate mortgage to disappear would increase interest rates, hitting urban and rural consumers the hardest.
- 3 Ensure that home mortgage loans are available to creditworthy consumers in every community.

The National Association of REALTORS® and the California Association of REALTORS® look forward to working with our elected officials to achieve much needed housing finance reform. Together, we can build a stronger, more stable economy that will preserve homeownership, create jobs and revitalize our communities.

To learn more, log on to www.realtor.org